Course Description

Prevention involves much more than just brushing and flossing. Dynamic contemporary practice and leading-edge patient care should include salivary testing, complete oral cancer screenings, and the use of innovative oral health products and technologies. But how can a practitioner keep up? New products seem to appear almost daily. The course reviews more than thirty commercial and professional products, some new and exciting, and some established favorites seen in a new light. Participants will also learn research tips and participate in hands-on training. The content will help practitioners develop customized prevention programs that go far beyond teaching people how to brush and floss and build practices in the process.

Learning Outcomes:

- Review research on over thirty commercial and professional products that can make practice more effective and easier for patients and practitioners
- Develop a prevention program using tests, technologies, and products that fit a practice philosophy and style
- Experience hands on training with new products (OR Experience hands on practice with new products)
- Know where to find objective research on products and ingredients
- Identify resources with additional information and demonstrations
